1-Page Dopamine Menu

For the days when "do something nice for yourself" is too vague to be useful.

A calm menu of small, realistic options for when starting feels impossible.

1-Page Dopamine Menu

For the days when "do something nice for yourself" is too vague to be useful.

BY ENERGY LEVEL

LOW ENERGY

For when you are running on fumes.
(sit near a window; put on one familiar song)

MEDIUM ENERGY

For when you have a little bit of movement available.
(make a "good enough" snack; clear one visible surface)

HIGH ENERGY

For when momentum exists and you want somewhere to put it.
(batch-prepare tomorrow's basics; make the annoying phone call)

BY WHAT YOU NEED

SENSORY RESET

For when the world is too loud, bright, scratchy, fast, or close.
(headphones + brown noise; change into safe clothes)

CONNECTION

For when you need contact, but not necessarily a full conversation.
(send one emoji to a safe person; sit in the same room as someone)

NOVELTY

For when your brain wants a tiny spark, not a whole new life plan.
(try a different drink; change working location)

This is not a reward chart. It is a menu for future-you: small, realistic options you can pick from when your brain is too tired, too fast, too flat, or too overloaded to invent a helpful thing from scratch. — Ollie neurodivers³ is a home for honest stories, practical tools, and ideas for making everyday life work better with a neurodivergent brain. I make resources for late-diagnosed and self-identified neurodivergent adults who are tired of being told to try harder at systems that were never built for them. This workbook is not a clinical tool. It is a practical one. Use what helps; leave what does not.

About neurodivers³

— Ollie
